

Explore Legal Horizons with the County Antrim Grand Jury Fund Bursary

Are you a law student at Queen's University Belfast with aspirations that extend beyond Northern Ireland? The County Antrim Grand Jury Fund Bursary could be your gateway to enriching legal experiences and academic growth.

A Legacy of Legal Support

Established in 1972, the County Antrim Grand Jury Fund was created from the proceeds of property once held by the County Antrim Grand Jury. With the approval of the Ministry of Finance (now the Department of Finance), the fund was entrusted to Queen's University to promote and encourage legal education.

Today, this legacy continues to support students and graduates of the School of Law through bursaries designed to enhance their legal studies and professional development.

A bursary of approximately £1,500 (subject to available funding) may be awarded to support legal research and study-related travel outside Northern Ireland, including the cost of books approved by the School of Law.

Whether you're attending a legal seminar abroad, conducting comparative legal research, or gaining practical experience in another jurisdiction, this bursary can help make it possible.

Applications should be submitted to the designated contact within the School of Law by the specified deadline.
